

Condition Assessment Studies (CAS)

One aspect of a Reliability Centered Maintenance process is condition monitoring, the practice of closely monitoring the 'health', operating metrics and status of a given component or system to proactively identify any significant changes that could indicate a potential future failure.

The condition monitoring approach requires the collection and analysis of significant amounts of product-specific data, and managing that information can pose a challenge for companies of all sizes.

